

No one's watching your videos right now, and that's the best thing that could happen to you. In 18 seconds, I'm going to teach you the 3 reasons obscurity is actually your greatest creative asset... even if it feels discouraging, awkward, or straight-up pointless right now.

But first, it's crazy, and you might not believe me but I didn't talk about this stuff for years. Most people don't know I was abandoned as a baby, or that I was homeless as a teen. I lived out of my car for most of my 20's. These weren't just chapters of my life... they were the trenches I climbed out of. But I never shared them. Not on social. Not at work with colleagues and barely even friends business. The most intimate conversations I've had have been in private masterminds or therapy.

But, for the first time, I'm going to start telling those stories... right here. Not because I've figured it all out, but because I finally get what this platform is really for, connection.

So here are 3 reasons being invisible right now is the gift you're not using:

One: You get to experiment in public without pressure.

There's no brand deal on the line. No audience to impress. Just raw, unfiltered space to figure out what you really want to say.

Two: You get to find your real voice.

Not the version that's optimized for clicks. Not the one that sounds like every other creator in your niche. The one that's been waiting for your unique voice to finally speak up.

Three: The people watching now? They're not your audience... they're your origin story.

They'll remember these early videos. The ones where your lighting sucked. Where you fumbled your words. And they'll say, "I was there before anyone knew who they were."

If you're in that early stage, no followers, no likes, no momentum... I want you to hear this loud and clear: You're not behind. You're just early. And that means you're free to experiment and play

So follow for more today if you're done waiting to be perfect before you show up because the moment you hit that plus button, you're already doing the work.
